The question of ab initio is about this: Prior to the late civil war there were sev-eral millions of indemnity bonds issued by the General Government to the State of Texas. During the existence of the Confederacy the State authorities sold a horse, named Charley, that once saved him from being "stunk" in the prairie. His gratitude to the faithful equine was touchingly enthusiastic. "Did I not the Federal authority, the provisional authorities appointed in the State appeared in the Supreme Court of the United States and asked an injunction restraining parties holding bonds thus sold from drawing any interest upon them. These parties now appear before the Court, and, through their attorneys, ask that the injunction be dissolved, upon the ground that Texas is not a State, and has no standing as such in the Supreme Court, or in other words, that all legislation and public sets in Texas since se ession, are void ab initio On this question the debates of the Convention are as virulent as on the issue of division, the large amount of money involved variously affecting th thore they pushed it in keeping it there and many pressges of increased violence and anarchy are drawn if the instrument framed by it be put in operation in the State, though there are not lacking other opinions which say that the State is prospering, and that the Constitutio will either be defeated or so practically nullified as to work little lasting injury
